Gov't rips Histadrut, workers over strike

THE government blasted the Histadrut leadership and workers over the weekend for the strikes against the budget cuts and their violation of labor court restraining

At Friday's cabinet meeting, Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu condemned the wave of strikes declared by the Histadrut as a "political" action which has "no justification." rebuffed the Ministers

Histadrut's claim that the strike was planned to protest budget cuts, saying clauses to the 1997. budget that would have burt the had been removed.

Finance Minister Dan Meridor condemned the Histadrut for ignoring labor court restraining orders against the strikes. "It is inconceivable that workers will violate the law and get back-ing for this from the Histadrut leadership," Meridor said, adding that the Histadrut's "delegitimization of the labor court is an attack on the essence of democracy."

The Tel Aviv Labor Court issued an arrest warrant for Histadrut trade union section head Shlomo Shani on Friday, after he did not appear in court for a hearing on his violation of restraining orders. He became angry when Netanyahu rejected it in their meeting earlier last week. Without it, he told Netanyahu, "You can keep Hebron."

Netanyahu telephoned Arafat on Friday, at the Palestinians' initiative, Netanyahu's spokesman Shai Bazak said, but no details of the conversation were disclosed. End of the line for Cairo line

The last bus to Cairo will leave Tel Aviv today and return tomorrow, Ratner said, leaving Israelis with the alternatives of flying or taking a chartered bus to Egypt.

However, Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai, who visited Egypt last week at the invitation of Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, on Friday called on Transportation Minister Yitzhak

Levy to act to stop the cancellation of the bus line, No. 100. Mordechai said the Tel Aviv-Cairo bus line is an expression of peace between the two countries and a sign of normalization. He said the peace with Egypt is strategic and each country must make efforts to preserve and mirrore it.

"The operation of the Tel Aviv-Cairo line is important, even if the government will have to help Egged to maintain it due to the small number of passengers," Mordechai said in a statement.

Ratner said the government turned down Egged's request to subsidize the line, which was inaugurated in 1982, three years after Israel and Egypt signed a peace treaty. Hundreds of Israelis traveled on the line every week during the 1980s, but Egged cut its service in recent years to just once a week due to the drop in demand.

Report: Dead Sea Works planned to sell salt to Iraq in '95

THE Dead Sea Works planned to sell salt to Iraq in 1995 in violation of the UN trade embargo on Saddam Hussein's regime, Ma'ariv reported Friday.

The United Nations imposed trade sanctions on Iraq for its 1990 invasion of Kuwait. In the 1991 Gulf War, Saddam ordered 39 Scud missiles fired at Israel in hopes of drawing it into the fighting and breaking up the Arab alliance against him. On Friday, Ma'ariv published a 1995 letter from the Dead Sea Works salt mining company to Mordechai Yona, a Tel Aviv contractor. In the letter, Israeli salt shipments to Iraq are discussed. Ma'ariv said.

"It seems to us that a salt shipment to Iraq should go through the Abdullah Bridge near Jericho," said the letter.

In a joint statement, Yona and the director of the Dead Sea

Works, Uri Ben-Nun, said, according to Ma'ariv: "There was an intent to sell salt to Iraq after receiving queries from an outside party who will remain nameless." "We considered the offer but the Iraqis dropped the deal because they claimed the price of the salt was too high - the idea ultimaltly fell through and not one gram (ounce) of salt was sold to Iraq,"

Neither Ben-Nun nor Yona was available for comment Friday. However, the newspaper quoted an Israeli involved in the deal as saying that Israel did sell thousands of tons of salt to Iraq in 1995.

Sa'id Tatur, 14, of Kafr Reina near Nazareth, was killed on Friday when the car he was traveling in crashed into a truck head-on on the Nazareth bypass road. The car's driver was seriously injured.

In a similar accident, Tal Begin, 27, of Kibbutz Beit Zera, was killed when the car he was driving suddenly swerved into a truck, colliding with it head-on, near the entrance to Kibburz Tel Katzir on Friday morning. A 25-year-old Ra'anana resident, who was five months pregnant, was fatally injured last night when a truck rolled into her. At a meeting between Netanyahu and three senior Palestinian officials in Jerusalem on Friday, Netanyahu reportedly explained to preventive security chiefs Jibril Rajoub, Mahmoud Dahlan and Abdel Razak Yahya that he was motivated exclusively by security requirements. His decision to defer to Palestinian demands on a buffer zone was taken despite the advice of senior security officials. Palestinian sources said. from Hebron to Kiryat Arba. Netanyahu says Oslo permits natural expansion of settlements, while Arafat maintains that neither party should take steps which prejudice final negotiations. Two bombs wound 19 in Algiers

PARIS (Reuter) - Nineteen people were wounded when two bombs exploded in a cafe and a bakery in Algiers on Friday, Algerian newspapers said yesterday, blaming the latest in a string of attacks in the Algerian capital on Moslem rebels.

Two car bombs in Algiers earlier in the week were reported to have killed at least 18 people.

El Watan newspaper said a bomb hidden in a box exploded on Friday morning at a bakery in the Moslem fundamentalist stronghold of Eucalyptus in southern Algiers, wounding seven people.

Twelve more people were wounded when a second bomb exploded in a cafe in the same area, said Liberte newspaper. The newspapers blamed Moslem guerrillas for the two bombings.

On Thursday a car bomb exploded near a paramili-tary police station in Algiers, killing at least 10 peo-ple and wounding 68. Monday a car bomb ripped through the capital's commercial Larbi Ben Mehidi Street. The security services said it killed three people but local newspapers put the death toll at eight and said more than 70 were wounded.

Liberte said after Monday's attack that the rebels had made a mockery of government claims to have gained the upper hand in the war against the Islamic fundamentalists.

Police defuse bomb under Sinn Fein man's car

BELFAST (Reuter) - Sinn Fein, the political arm of the IRA, warned Irish nationalists yesterday that they should be on the alert against attack by pro-British Loyalists after police defused a bomb under a leading Republican's car. Security forces in Northern Ireland meanwhile continued a clampdown in an Irish nationalist stronghold of Belfast after making overnight amests.

A Sinn Fein spokesman in Londonderry, Northern Ireland's second city, said a "suspect device" had been found on the ground under the car of party official Liam Duffy at a Catholic housing estate in the largely Protestant Waterside area.

Police later confirmed it was a bomb. A spokesman said: "Army experts have defused a device found under a car."

Police declined to say who they suspected of planting the device. "It is a matter for investigation," one source said.

The incident comes a week after Loyalist guerrillas were blamed for a car bomb that wounded a leading republican, Eddie Copeland. Protestant leaders close to the pro-British extremists denied the attack signalled the end of their two-year-old truce.

Senior Sim Fein official Martin McGuinness said pro-Irish Catholic nationalists and republicans should be "extremly vigilant" after yesterday's incident involving Duffy, the party's director of elections in Waterside.

The incident comes at a time of heightened tension after attacks by Irish Republican Army guerrillas opposed to British rule, and fears that a two-year-old cease-fire by pro-British Loyalist foes may be

The IRA resumed hostilities in a 27-year war on British rule last February after an 18-month truce. Politicians across the sectarian divide say they believe Loyalist hard-liners carried out last Sunday's attack even though the Combined Loyalist Military Command has maintained silence and figures close to the guerrillas say the cease-fire is intact.

Security forces continued their clampdown yesterday afternoon in the Whiterock area in the west of Belfast, where soldiers and police sealed off a house.

"A number of persons were taken into custody," a spokesman said, but declined to say if guerrilla weapons had been found. Residents said at least five people were arrested at the house.

Air raids hit Kabul as Taleban advance

(Reuter) - Forces of the Purist September 27, when it ousted the Islamic Taleban have made a major advance north of Kabul, capturing the strategic villages of Qarabagh and Istalif, some 40 kilometers north of the city.

In a fierce 24-hour battle that started Friday morning, Taleban fighters drove back opposition forces at least 10 km, the Taleban governor of Kabul, Mullah Kairullah

Khairkhaw, said yesterday.

"Yesterday we launched an attack from Istalif and Qalaqan. We captured the village of Qarabagh and moved north. We have also captured the hills overlooking Bagram airbase [some 60 km. north of Kabul]. We have taken over 200 prisoners and there are many dead."

Kabul was hit by bombing raids four times yesterday—the first major air attacks on the capital in a mouth and Taleban officials in Kabul said they believed the raids were in retalintion for opposition losses.

Although there were frequent air raids in the immediate aftermath of Afghanistan the Taleban's capture of the city government of President Burhanuddin Rabbani, there had been no major raids in over a month.

When journalists drove to Qarabagh yesterday morning, there were dozens of bodies of opposition fighters lying by the road, many of them with bank notes or coins thrust into their mouths or hands - a symbol of the mercenary.

Mullah Khairkhaw said the Taleban were negotiating with the International Committee of the Red Cross to return the bodies to the opposition.

Maulawi Jalaluddin Haqqani, the Taleban front line commander said that the fighting had stopped to allow refugees to flee the area.

"The fighting isn't finished, but we are letting the women and children escape the area. When they have gone, we will start fighting again," Haqqani said.

Taleban fighters had made makeshift examples of their trademark white flag by cutting short lengths of cloth from their turbans.

Tajik fighters release two Western captives

TASHKENT, Uzbekistan (Reuter) -A Briton and a South African captured by guerrillas in war-torn Tajikistan were freed yesterday, the head of their mining company said.

They have been released. They are now in (the Tajik capital) Dushanbe and they are in good form," Robert Mendelsohn, head of London-based Gold and Mineral Excavation Ltd, told Reuters in the neighboring republic of Uzbekistan.

The Briton, Alex Lemon, and the South African, Barrent Knotze, were held by Tajik Islamist fighters for nearly three weeks after the rebels.

1 POWERFUL storm that lumped snow and freezing rain icross the American Northwest ieft more than 300,000 homes and husinesses without power in Washington and Oregon, stymied buses and planes and closed high-way passes through the Cascade

Downtown Seattle was a virtual ghost town on Friday, with almost no traffic and few people. The cofiee houses managed to stay open,

At least three deaths were blamed on the storm. A Portland, Oregon man died of a heart attack while trimming broken tree limbs in his yard; a 62-year-old Washington state woman was killed in a collision Thursday with another car on a road covered with snow and ice; and a Washington state man was asphyxiated by fumes from a generator being operated in a closed area at his home.

Snowfall amounts in western Washington ranged from about half a foot (15 cm.) in downtown Seattle to 13 1/2 inches (34 cm.) in suburban Mountlake Terrace.

Scores of holiday travelers and skiers were stranded when at least 2 feet (0.6 meters) of snow closed the two major routes across the Cascade Range in Washington - Interstate 90 over Snoqualmie Pass and U.S. 2 over Bridge, which crosses Paget Stevens Pass. Russian newspapers hailed the new "strategic partnership" yesterday. The respected daily livestia called it "our reply to the United States" and Nezavisimaya Gazeta said "it will entail changes of a geopolitical nature.

some 3,000 jobs just at the casino and there would be another 11,000 spin-off jobs." For years the Catskills have been a refuge for people from New York City. By car, it is just an hour-and-a-half from the city to the rolling green hills and streams of the Catskills. Even people who have never been there have heard of the legendary hotel dining rooms where the food keeps coming and the ballrooms where vaudeville shtick was served up by the likes of Milton Berle and George Burns.

There were once 300 hotels in the Catskills, but today only seven major resorts are left as the advent of cheap air travel and widespread air-conditioning in the city took their toll.

"I would say that there are certain hotels up here that will not survive if we don't get casinos, and there are several of us who will," said George Parker, one of the owners of the Concord, which is behind in both its property taxes and utility bills.

Lee Karr, a local builder who is chairman of the Coalition Against Casino Gambling, believes the era of the Borscht Belt resorts is over in any case. Karr is bitter about the hotels' embrace of gambling, which he insists will leave a trail of victims in its wake.

"It steals from the poor and gives to the rich. It's the Robin Hood principle in reverse," he said. "The casinos will clean people out indiscriminately, meaning that they prey on people who are addicted and can't stop."

Many of the tens of thousands of Orthodox Jews who flock to the Catskills every summer from New

Some see gambling saving NY's famous Borscht Belt mately," Ungarischer said. Not all Orthodox Jews in the Catskills are opposed to casinos. In Vacation Village, a community of 200 families, many of them "snowbirds" who migrate to Florida for the winter, there is support for the idea. Taxes are constantly going up and nobody here who's a homeowner appreciates that," a retired civil servant from Brooklyn said.

"We need something that's going to provide jobs and increase the tax base," his wife, a retired teacher, added. "I'm not sure about gambling as the answer but let's try it ... (it) can't hurt."

If an Indian-run casino is to come to the Catskills, it would have to be approved by Gov. George Pataki because it would not be on Indian land, where courts have held tribes are free to open casinos. The Pataki administration has reportedly raised the issue during land claim negotiations with the Oneida Indians. If non-Indian casinos are ever to come to the Catskills, the legislature in Albany would have to approve and there would have to be a statewide referendum, followed by local referenda in the Catskills and three other regions in the state where gambling has been proposed. Both opponents and supporters of gambling in the Catskills agree Sullivan County voters would likely approve it.

"Most people think that the county would pass a local referendum, but it may not get to that point because there's a lot of disagreement about whether or not the statewide referendum will pass," said T.R. Pavis-Weil. a writer with the Middletown Times Herald Record who has been covering the issue of gambling.

The earliest such a statewide referendum could be held is

BackWeb: A surfers' paradise

JUDY SIEGEL-ITZKOVICH

MAGINE going to a major university library and having to search for books on La specific topic in a few minutes using an index listing every volume in which a certain word is found. You will be overwhelmed with information, and the chances of locating what interests you are those of finding a needle in a haystack.

That dilemma is increasingly posed by the Internet, which is rapidly becoming an electronic jungle populated by hundreds of thousands of Web sites and databases. "Data mining" - the finding of relevant and accurate information from electronic sources - is a new profession resulting from this cornu-

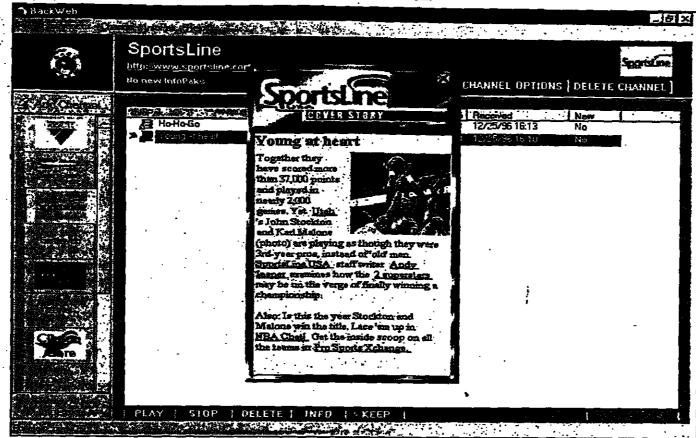

Now, a new Israeli-developed technology is helping to personalize the Internet, automatically but politely giving access to infor-mation that each user seeks instead of forcing him to search for it and wait until it slowly downloads into his computer.

BackWeb, a company based in Ramat Gan with 55 employees here and in New York and San Jose, California, has just launched this service, paid for mainly by those suppliers of information - from newspapers to commercial marketers of goods - that want it to reach suitable audiences. BackWeb's pioneering technology allows Web site "channels" selected by the user to float onto the computer screen as graphic symbols, and to be clicked on at will.

The company was founded in 1995 by BRM Technologies. Ltd., an eight-year-old, Israel-based firm with experience in the Internet software market BRM also cofounded Checkpoint Software Technologies. which developed global network security software. "Companies on the Internet are learning that posting information on their sites and hoping users will eventually stumble across it is not an effective way to market," says Eli Barkat, BackWeb's president and chief executive officer.

In the middle of December, The Jerusalem Post's Internet Edition became the first online newspaper to utilize BackWeb technology; The Wall Street Journal will be the second within a few weeks.

Anyone reaching The Post's Internet Edition (www.jpost.co.il) has the option of clicking on the BackWeb option. This allows him to register as a user at no cost, download 1.5 megabytes of free software and select a customized menu of BackWeb channels. Whenever he is connected to the Net, icons representing these channels will appear from time to time on his screen and offer their wares. They disappear in a few seconds if not clicked. The Internet Edition offers the main news headlines of the day (which flow out of the icon even without clicking it), news stories, a selection of opinion articles, editorials and business and sports reports. In addition, subscribers can select which sections of the newspaper they

BackWeb also offers dozens of other channels, from financial and technology news to ski reports, astrology forecasts, children's games and weather updates. These include inquiry.com (a site for information technology professionals); Jumbo (an archive of 75,000 freeware and shareware programs); NetRadio Network (a round-the-clock Internet-only radio network); ResourceWorks (a designer and developer of educational courses geared to managers and info-tech professionals); SmartGames (a cornucopia of puzzles); and American Singles (a network of singles, with lists of new members, events and products of interest to unmarrieds).

There is no limit to the number of channels for which BackWeb users may register. Once registered for a channel, the user will automatically get presentations from the channel whenever they become available. Unlike the situation in which it's difficult to remove one's name from an electronic mailing list, BackWeb users can delete any channel from their list of preferences and from that moment, they won't receive any more information from that source. This gives end-users complete control over the sources of information they want to access, according to company R&D director Sneli

In addition, say BackWeb co-founders Lior Hass and Iftah Sneh, the company's technology senses available bandwidth when the user is connected to the Internet. If the connection is idle because the user is just reading a particular Web page or browsing at pages, BackWeb goes to work behind the scenes to download presentations from the channels for which the user registered. This optimizes use of Internet connection time and reduces costs.

Since channel owners' icons are displayed on the screen even when users are not on-line, the impact the channels have on their customers is maximized. For example, a large department-store chain may want to notify loyal customers of sales; if the customer selects the company's channel, he can receive updated information in real time.

Hass notes that BackWeb technology can be used for broadcasting (sending information to all registered users, irrespective of factors like profession, location or personal statistics); narrowcasting (targeting a specific sector or combination of sectors to reach specific andiences, such as an airline seeking frequent flyers living in a certain country); or personalization (users indicating personal preferences and receiving the information according to a specific ID numher). The channel owners receive from tomers, BackWeb detailed reports on how often their site is being clicked on and what sections are most attractive. BackWeb (its Web site is at http://www.backweb.com) also sells special software for servers in the workplace: employees' computer screens can serve as a company "bulletin board" and supply immediate information. The company can build its own broadcast channels and pipe in those of importance to staffers' job performance. BackWeb is best utilized by computers with 16 megabytes of RAM, a Pentium processor and Windows 95, but it can be used - albeit rather anemically but those whose computer equipment is less souped-up, according to the Brazilian-born

The only company that could theoretical-y be considered its competitor would be PointCast, a central network not too different from the America On Line server. It provides information free to users, but this appears "aggressively" on the screen whenever the keyboard is not being used, and the user must stop all he's doing, even if he's busy with something else or isn't interested in seeing it. BackWeb is not a central server but makes "enabling software" that lets any company establish its own BackWeb server and have a direct relationship with its cus-

Rating: four-and-a-half stars

SINCE Israeli drivers' habits on the road are so atrocious, perhaps most efforts at reducing the accident toll should be invested in teaching children about traffic rules and dangers. These two edutainment disks are aimed at this goal, but they go about it in an entirely different way.

The "Journey" disk, produced in breathtakingly lifelike, 3-D graphics, stars a brass-colored, pot-bel-lied robot boy named Rubie, who is charged by Matityahu Mati Automati, the king of the Happy Robot Planet, to find the Book of Traffic Rules, which has somehow gone missing in the national archives. This loss has caused traffic chaos among the the planet's airships and threatens to wipe out the kingdom.

On the "58th day of the 17th month," Rubie goes out in the universe to try to find the book of rules. The scenario is like a Rube Goldberg contraption, with one object picked up by the user's computer mouse after another deposited in Rubie's four-compartment suitcase and stored until it has to pulled out to bring Rubie closer to his goal. For example, the user must figure out that a pin. and a balloon picked up separately... during his travels can be used to up the guard barring the way to his spaceship.

The instruction book that comes with the disk offers no hints, and if you can't figure out the hints and find the objects, you are stuck. Only by calling the Makhshevet's technician in Herzliya can you get instructions to an formand of home instructions to go forward. (I have to admit that my 12-year-old son and I got stuck more than balfway through, so we weren't able to help Rubie reach his target, but proba-bly other users will do better.) Rubie lands in the Land of the Automobiles, and since he is used only to airborne ships, he doesn't know how to cross the street safely. A friendly signpost named Tamara explains that drivers can't stop quickly enough if you cross with a red light; that seatbelts are not meant to imprison drivers but to keep them safe; and the meaning of all the roadsigns. On advice from a queen, Rubie reaches the Land of the Bicycles, where all residents have human heads and bike bodies. There he learns about safe bike riding, and that one

Produced in Hebrew, it's odd that the mouth movements of the characters are not in synch with the speech, but apparently, the company produced an English version for export whose sentences are longer. Five- to 10-yearolds are a suitable age group for learning the traffic laws, but it will take an older child, a teenager or even an adult, to help them along to the end. However, the disk is beautifully and imaginatively produced, and highly recommended.

Itztrubal is a pioneering disk by the non-profit CET that turns the computer into a design studio for children. If you have a printer (especially an ink-jet color model), your children can produce magnificent bordered pictures, diagrams and signs for decorating schoolwork and walls and for making personalized greeting cards and gifts. The electronic palette has a large number of options, including sound; one can make greeting cards on a computer diskette with sounds and pictures, and give them away.

Since the original disk was released to an appreciative audience, CET decided to produce supplementary disks that triple the number of images and sounds, once the original Irrarubal is in your hard disk. This new disk teaches road safety and symbols. Unlike most CD-ROMs for children, it doesn't lead them every step of the way, but encourages children's initiative and imagination, so that every user will produce a unique result.

Itztrubal can be used at one to six levels, depending on the child's age, with the sixth containing all the available options. The road-safety section has a large selection of sounds: The sudden braking of a vehicle, a bus or car engine, a tractor, traffic, birds chirping and so on. The user can pick any or several of these to produce a tableau.

There are also many background photographs and drawings to choose from including a chil-. dren's playground, a highway or a country road. The user must select pictures of children, adults, houses, vehicles, traffic lights, street furniture and road signs, and place them in a way that shows safe and/or dangerous behavior. One can also add Hebrew road-safety slogans, such as "Even Crossing at the Green Light Demands Caution." There is a road-sign dictionary that displays all symbols and what they mean, but it would be a good idea for an adult to explain things to younger chil-

The Symbols section of the disk offers an incredible variety of graphic pictures, from music and the arts, to sports, professions and animals. There is also a repository of hieroglyphics and Bliss symbols (these were developed to help the disabled express themselves). As in the original Itztrubal disk. one can choose from a fantastic аттау of 180 designs for making screen "wallpaper" on which drawings can be produced.

If both of these disks help produce a road-safety-aware younger generation, a dent could be made in the accident toll in the decades

The patient must undergo a series of tests, from a dental exam and angiography to various scans, to determine whether they can safely undergo the procedure. The innovative method, developed in Portland, Oregon, requires bringing the patient to the operating room and injecting a concentrated solution of a sugar called mannitol into the cranial artery, supplying blood to the site of the tumor. The mannitol causes the cells to contract, causing the intercellular spaces in the blood vessels to expand and permit the entry of the chemo drugs, which are injected immediately afterwards.

Radiation therapy is sometimes, but not always, needed later.
Treatment of 4,000 US patients has shown that the brain is thus significantly exposed to the chemo drugs, which have proven themselves as effective against malignancies in the rest of the body. No serious complications were reported. A medical team from Portland supervised the first treatments at Hadassah and will follow up the patients' reactions to the therapy.

> DO CELL PHONES FRY BRAINS?

No one in the world knows for sure whether regular use of cellular phones poses a danger to health. That view was voiced by Professor James Lean, head of the International Commission for Radiation Research, and Dr. Ya'acov Gwen, director of the communications engineering department at the Holon Center

For Technological Education. Speaking at a recent radio-science conference in the Holon center, the two experts said that the influence of ceilular-phone radiation could be either awesome or infinitesimal. Current claims are contradictory, and additional research is needed.

Dr. Yosef Shapira, president of the Israel Radio Sciences Committee, said the great variety of electronic equipment being used today requires legislation setting new standards that will protect public health. Shapira noted that Israel recently joined a European initiative in this field. As a result of the conference, a council will be set up here to investigate the influences of radiowaves on public health; it will include representatives from government ministries, the universities, public organizations, communications networks, and the local telecommunications industry.

GUMMING UP THE WORKS Chewing too much sugarless

gum can cause diarrhea, according to The Lancet, which has published a case report on a British woman who chewed on up to 60 sticks of gum a day. Doctors were baffled when the 32-year-old air stewardess was admitted to a hospital with chronic severe diarrhea and intestinal pain. Her blood, urine, liver, and intestinal tests were all normal. Finally, she happened to offer an important clue: Her heavy "diet" of sugarless gum introduced 75 grams of sorbitol into her body. This sugar substitute is neither digested nor absorbed by the digestive system and has a laxative effect. When she reduced her intake, she recov-

SRAEL suffers from a chronic deficit of potable water, and hasn't been very successful in reducing the overdraft. But it is still in better shape than western Africa - countries like Burkina Fasso, Mali, Senegal, Ghana and Nigeria - where the meager amount of rainfall runs off rather than being absorbed

Fifteen agricultural scientists from this part of Africa recently came to Ben-Gurion University of the Negev in Beersheba for a two-week workshop on the use of plants for increasing the efficiency of rainwater.

BGU experts Professors Dov Pasternak and Dov Schlissel, who organized the workshop. showed their guests species of plants that thrive in the dry season and can be used as a ground cover to divert rainwater that would otherwise be lost.

At the end of their studies, the Africans were presented with 100 kilos of plants, which will be cultivated in their native

THE LAW - ON PLASTIC The latest edition of the largest legal database in the country has been released by CDI Systems of Jerusalem. Called Takdin, the CD-ROM contains 800 new rulings of the Supreme Court and High Court of Justice, including that dealing with the appeal of Yitzbak Rabin's murderer, Ruti Nahmani's suit to obtain her frozen embryos, and the appeal of the Temple Mount Faithful regarding Solomon's Stables.

The disk, which is updated every quarter, updates the previous one, with a total of 2,000 new rulings at all court levels from the Supreme Court down to the district and magistrates' courts and the labor courts.

The software, which now contains 35,000 cases, also presents all of the country's laws in their most current version since 1949.

Lawyers' work is eased by the software's quick search features, according to CDI Systems director Hillel Ashkenazi. The disk also contains a large bibliography on legal articles that appeared in journals and the general press and a glossary of :ter lets the red picture enter the legal terms.

The disk costs $300 plus VAT for the initial disk, and $125 for the update (but we all know that lawyers can afford it).

HAVE a computer program that came with paper and cel-Liophane glasses, one lens blue and the other red, for seeing things on the computer screen in three dimensions. How does this work? Does it matter which color covers each eye? Using them for a long time made me dizzy. Why? Robert, Tel Aviv.

University of Haifa psychologist Dr. Joel Norman, who is an expert in visual perception, replies:

Wearing such glasses with colored cellophane over the eyes is a primitive way of viewing stereoscopic presentations. Forty years ago or so, people went to the movies and wore these eyeglasses to make the action seem very real-

This mimics the situation presented by the human anatomy: the eyes - set about 6.5 centimeters apart - get a slightly different view of the same image, thus producing a three-dimensional perspective of depth. The computer program produces two different images, one in red and the other in blue. These two colors are usually used (or, alternately, red and green) because they are far away from each other in the color spectrum. The blue cellophane filter lets the blue picture reach the eye, and the red fileye. This causes the two images to be fused into one 3-D image. If you reversed the colors of the cellophane, the image would come out wrong, with things that should look far looking near instead.

There are much more sophisticated methods for producing stereoscopic images, such as technology Sony uses in theaters: infrared light flashes a different picture 60 times per second in each eye to produce a 3-D image.

Vilna'i's targets

HILE not beating the drums of war, Deputy Chief of General Staff Maj.-Gen. Matan Vilna'i used the opportunity of presenting the IDF's 1997 work plan to Hille Maj.-Although Syria claims it is only helping Hille Maj.-Although Sy send the clearest message possible concerning the threat of future conflict with Syria.

The likelihood of a war with Syria is greater than it was a year or two ago," Vilna'i bluntly stated at a press conference for military correspondents. He told the reporters that following Syria's redeployment of its crack commando divisions to the Mount Hermon region, Israel has increased its preparedness for war by replenishing exhausted ammunition supplies, introducing advanced artillery and upgraded tanks and improving training exercises. The IDF's working assumption for next year, he added, is that Israel is likely to find itself in a military confrontation with Syria.

Vilna'i's remarks seem aimed at two quite disparate targets. The first is Damascus. Syria's redeployments in the late summer increased fears in Israel that Syria was planning a smash and grab raid on Israeli positions on Mount Hermon, as the first stage of a combined military and diplomatic assault to force Israeli concessions on the Golan Heights. According to this scenario, Syria would launch a small-scale attack, forcing an Israeli response, before an internationally brokered cease-fire would lead to the resumption of the stalled peace talks between Jerusalem and Damascus. The talks, according to this thesis, would eventually lead to Israeli territorial concessions.

As Vilna'i stressed at his press conference, the IDF's increased preparedness is intended as a deterrent to prevent any Syrian action and not an invitation to conflict. The importance of this deterrence cannot be overstated: The dynamics of war are such that even one small military maneuver can quickly snowball into an unintended larger conflict, which then takes on a momentum of its own.

Moreover, Israel cannot allow itself to be threatened into negotiations. Just as the Oslo process demanded that the PLO commit to ending violence against Israel, so too Israel cannot resume the Wye Plantation talks with Svria under the shadow of future strife. Despite Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu's confidence that he can bring about a peace treaty between israel and Syria within the next four years, a quick and successful resumption of peace talks seems most unlikely.

The Hizbuilah roadside bomb which killed two IDF soldiers last week in south Lebanon brought the number of IDF fatalities there to 27 for 1996 and Hizbullah, with Syria's express backing, is stepping up its attacks in the security zone. Dozens of planeloads of weapons from Iran destined for Hizbullah - including the fiberglass imitation rocks in which the deadly

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Lebanon the truth of the matter is that Israel badly wants to leave Lebanon, while Damascus is happy to have it stay there. Indeed, one of the Netanyahu government's first diplomatic initiatives was the "Lebanon first" proposal, under which Israel would withdraw from southern Lebanon in return for the Lebanese army moving south and disarming Hizbullah. Syria, the power broker in Lebanon with some 40,000 troops stationed there, rejected the deal, preferring to keep Hizbullah as a means of applying military pressure on Israel to force concessions on the Golan Heights.

But aside from Syria, Vilna'i also had another target, closer to home, for his remarks: the Treasury. Over the next few weeks, the defense establishment will be pressing its case in the cabinet for a reported NIS 2 billion budget increase, which is at odds with the government's determination to slash spending due to the country's worsening economic situation.

In a meeting last Thursday with the Knesset's Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee and representatives of the Knesset Finance Committee, both Vilna'i and Chief of General Staff Lt.-Gen. Amnon Lipkin-Shahak argued that due to the worsening security situation in the North, and unpaid compensation for the expenses of last spring's Operation Grapes of Wrath, more money was needed for defense if long-term military projects were not to be

No one would accuse the army's top brass of scare-mongering for the sake of increasing the defense establishment's budget; the threat from Syria is no sheep in wolves' clothing, but there is the nagging fear that one of the major drains on the defense budget, salaries and pensions for professional personnel, has still not been properly addressed. At last Thursday's meeting, the Treasury's deputy budget director, Uzi Levy, claimed that next year's defense budget shows a growth of NIS 117 million in real terms compared with 1996 and that the early retirement packages for military personnel represented a time bomb.

Defense Ministry Director-General Ilan Biran's angry response, that the Treasury was "looking to get" the Defense Ministry, was hardly a reasoned answer to an important statement. The army has enough real enemies to fight before making one out of the Treasury. Israel's military planners have to take into account that the country's future relies not just on its military strength, but also its economic well-being. In the 1997 battle of cuts, even IDF salary and pension levels are not sacred.

N the famous anecdote, George Bernard Shaw asks an Lattractive young woman whether she is willing to sleep with him for a million dollars.

After some hesitation, she agrees. "And if I offered you 10 dollars?" he asks, "What do you think I am?" the lady protests angrily.

"We've already agreed on what you are," replies the playwright.

I am not trying to compare the Netanyahu government to the woman in the anecdote, but the principle is the same.

David Bar-Illan, one of Binyamin Netanyahu's two chief advisers and a former Greater Israel extremist, has revealed that Netanyahu is ready for the establishment of a Palestinian state. In an interview Bar-Illan gave to this newspaper, of which he was a former editor, he reiterated this surprising revelation.

Is it possible that, during Netanyahu's tenure, a Palestinian state will be established? Bar-Illan's answer. "Call it anything you want... whether you call it a state or not is not really the important thing... [Ariel] Sharon keeps saying they really have a state already. In many ways it is much more of a state than it was envisioned as being in the Oslo agree-

In what way is this true? Bar-Illan explains: "They'll probably soon mint their own currency and probably there'll be very little that we can do about it... They have a flag, they have an army. They don't even bother calling the army a police anymore, they call it an army. They have foreign relations... they have embassies everywhere. If they declare a state tomorrow... I'm sure that the whole world will recognize it."

So Netanyahu no longer objects to a Palestinian state. But he objects to "unlimited sovereign-

What limitations does he want? Bar-Illan provides details:

• "It cannot have an army of a quarter of a million people." Meaning: a smaller army would be acceptable. Fifty thousand? 100,000?

"[It cannot] produce its own nonconventional [or] conventional weapons." Is there a Palestinian who is envisioning the manufacture of an atomic bomb, or tanks, for that matter?

URI AVNERY

 "[We don't want] two million refugees standing outside Tel Aviv." What if the number is less than two million? And if they are not exactly near Tel Aviv? How about an agreed-upon humane solution to the refugee problem? "[It cannot] make alliances with radical regimes like Iran and Iraq." Ah, so it is okay to sign with Egypt and Syria, and of Now that the principle of a course with Japan and South

• "[It cannot] control the airspace over Israel." What is this supposed to mean? Aren't Syria and Jordan already capable of threatening our airspace? Actually, Bar-Illan concedes that there is virtually no state in the world with unlimited sover-

European states have relinquished part of their sovereignty, Bar-Illan says, and Austria has committed itself to not having an army. (Actually Bar-Illan is mistaken. Austria does have an army; it has only committed itself to keeping its neutral status.) In short, the Palestinian state would not differ from many other respectable countries.

The interviewer: "So what you're saying is let's not get hung up anymore on whether they call it a state or not, let's focus on the capabilities question."

Bar-Illan: "That's right. And, of course, the size and all that, and the limitations."

SO LET'S agree that it is a state. What remains only is the negotiations about its limitations.

Bar-Illan, of course, plays the innocent. There is a tremendous difference between an entity recognized officially as a state, and any other merely state-like entity.

Who knows this better than Israel? Prior to 1948 we were offered a variety of "state-minus" formats, yet we insisted on a fullmaybe CHARLES KRAUTHAMMER

No. Instead they have written an open letter to Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu expressing deep concern over "unilateral actions, such as the expansion of settlements" that "could hait... the peace process." What Israeli offense provoked this opipouring of wise-man concem? Was Israel establishing new settlements? No. Was it expanding by one acre the boundaries of its West Bank settlements? No.

What Netanyahu did was make it easier for Israelis to live in existing settlements by restoring the kind of tax breaks they get if they live in hardship areas of the country (such as the development towns of northern Israel and the Negev) where life is a lot harder and more dangerous than in the big cities. *

Can anyone doubt that a place where innocent families are routipely shot at - just two days before Netanyahu made the change a woman and her young son were shot dead in their car by Palestinian gunmen - is a hardship area?

Netanyahu's move was essentially designed to signal that the government was not abandoning the settlers. It was meant to prevent a situation in which - in advance of upcoming and momentous "final-status" negotiations that will determine Israel's size, shape and viability - Israel's presence in the territories withers away as a result of the tensions and pressures of living there.

FLATTERING COMPARISON

Sir, - Amotz Asa-El joins the army of Prime Minister Netanyahu bashers with his column comparing him with Ze'ev Jabotinsky (December 20). What was especially annoying was the distorted short shrift that was made of the military career of Jabotinsky. Jabotinsky's role in founding the Jewish Legion, the first organized Jewish fighting unit in modern times, is entirely glossed over. According to A History of Israel by Howard Sachar, during World War L Jabotinsky strove to create the Zion Mule Corps which was deployed by the British in the disastrous Gallipoli campaign. At this time, Ben-Gurion was organizing a unit to fight on the Turkish side. Later, in the face of opposition by Zionist and Allied leaders, Jabotinsky finally succeeded in mustering three battalions to form a Jewish Legion to belp liberate Palestine from the Ottomans. Not only were Europeans recruited with the active proselytizing efforts of Jabotinsky," but when they landed here, he also inducted Palestinian Jews. According to Sachar, the Legion parrolled the Jordan Valley in the face of an expected Turkish counterattack and later joined "Allenby's climactic autumn offensive."

The Encyclopedia Judaica also credits Jabotinsky with more than "theory" regarding military activi-

ENGLISH LITERATURE

Sir, - The European Union's rejection of Shakespeare on their new banknotes (December 20) because he was thought to be antisemitic reminds me of the reaction to the new English curriculum for Israel schools in 1972, which replaced a Shakespeare play in the literature syllabus by a a choice of plays written in modern English -Arthur Miller, Bernard Shaw, Tennessee Williams, etc. This was part of the then-new policy of teaching English as a language of international communication tather than as a vehicle of cultural and literary appreciation only.

I was the chief inspector for English in the Ministry of Education and was amusingly shocked by a lead story in he rightwing British Daily Mail (not known as a newspaper devoted to cultural matters), which claimed, under the headline "Israel bans Shakespeare," that the new curriculum was Israel's revenge for Shylock and which accused me personally of depriving Israeli youth of the opportunity to become acquainted with the Bard. What inade me really unhappy was the fact that Encounter, an international cultural and intellectual journal, took up the story - it should have known better. A vicious pen in an Israeli evening newspaper saw the decision as an example of the lack of literary taste to be expected of the new "linguistic" orientation

Sir, - I was in an Eilat hotel recently, when two large families checked in. It was very clear that the men were carrying pistols in their waistbands, hardly necessary in Eilat. The hotel was full of English and European visitors, who would find the carrying of handguns objectionable. England at the moment, following the Dunblane murders, there is a very strong feeling against handguns. I do feel that guns should not be allowed on hotel premises and would urge hotel proprietors and the Ministry of Tourism to ensure that they are put in a safe place on checking in.

When I stayed at St. Andrew's Hospice, some years ago, there was a clear rule that all arms had to be placed in the hotel's strongroom; I hope that other hotels will follow suit. Perhaps those chains run by English chairmen might set

He was not related to any of the great Jewish families of Moslem Spain. The Jewish religion was humiliated because it sought backing from extraneous doctrines.

In Kuzari, says Fleischer, Halevi called not for religious revival, but for basic severance from Spanish culture - from Spain! Spain was in turmoil - areas were changing hands between Moslem and Christian rulers, and the Jews suffered. Jews were murdered in Toledo and in Majorca.

Halevi deplored the events in his poems, but in Moslem Spain Jews felt secure. None of the 40 noted poets of his period referred to the pogroms, except Halevi. He also wrote long poems evoking Zion. He was in the West, but his heart

Dr. Dafna Schwartz, director general of the institute, exudes a certain warmth and excitement about the program, an attitude that is mirrored by other members of the faculty. When the students first arrive, they usually have a somewhat suspi-cious attitude," she says, smiling. "They're wary of being accepted by the others.

"But we want them to feel welcome, so we do more than just the courses, we really get them out there in the field." Over the course of the program, the students have drunk tea in Beduin tents, shopped in markets across the country, and visited religious sites in each city. If they're studying hi-tech agricultural methods, the institute has taken them to the fields, where farmers demonstrate their black irrigation tubing and fish-breeding ponds. If "Something more esoteric, like sesame crops in the southern region of Sudan? No

EMILY MACAHLELA, a 38-yearold trainee from South Africa, sitting by the library's floor-to-ceilingwindows, is reading up on rural women's development, her specialty subject. "What I've enjoyed most about this program is the sense that I'm truly learning practical infor-mation that I can bring back to my center," she says, smacking her hand for emphasis. "We have so

Along with other students on the program, Macahlela will be traveling throughout India for two months after her time in Israel, going from village to village, and learning how rural Indians have applied low-cost efficient agricultural methods in their homes and fields. "We've seen agriculture in action here in Israel on kibbutzim and other farm cooperatives," she adds. "But seeing it in India, where their level of living is more similar to ours, will offer me another per-

For the last few years, several North American students have joined the international array of Mashav participants. Talia Fried, a 23-year-old graduate of Boston University, and Sarah Ferris, a 20vear-old undergraduate at the University of Wisconsin at Madison, are two of the three North Americans participating this year. Ferris is doing an independent study on the relationship between Jordan and Israel, revolving in part around the economic summit that ecently took place in Egypt. Fried is studying the progress of Ethiopian immigrants, and that of Ethiopian women in particular.

Both are excited about the field work they've conducted in their semester here, but have had a more difficult time communicating with the other students, breaking the cul-tural barriers. "It's great because you get to somewhat experience all parts of the world, especially coming from the States where we're so sheltered," says Fried. "But there are lots of stereotypes out there, especially about us as Americans."

Ferris nods her head in agreement. "We're living with Third World countries, and sometimes it's unbelievable to hear about their lives back home. There's one guy from Uganda who tells us stories food, or about the goats wandering through his village," she describes.
"And the woman from Nigeria who was telling us about her father and the tents for each of his wives," pipes in Fried. They have both enjoyed the program, complimenting the wonderful faculty and field study opportunities. "On the whole, it's been very positive," says Ferris, "but I think it's different for us than it is for the other students. They're able to communicate with each other and break down those cultural barriers more easily.

All too true. Besides creating a suitable environment for learning shout new economic and agricultural technologies, Mashav has been a breeding ground for more than a few romances in its 40 years of existence. There have been several relationships between the participants, and some marriages as well.

A Nepalese man and Russian woman were among the recent couples, and a Jordanian student had women "standing in line for him," says Schwartz. "But like I said, we're not just about education; we'll do anything to make our guests feel welcome.

"This seems to be the one involved with attention. The more complex a task you do the more of this brainwave there is," he said in a telephone interview ahead of the conference.

Martin said it was not clear why chocolate alone should have such an effect

"One reason is you are thinking about chocolate, maybe baking cakes or sweets, and because of

Jaguars upset Bills 30-27 in Buffalo

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) - Intimidated? Overmatched? Nervous?

Try gutsy, resourceful and patient, all traits the Jacksonville Jaguars displayed in stunning the Buffalo Bills 30-27 in an NFL playoff game yester-

Mike Hollis' 45-yard field, his third of the game, was decisive. The kick, with 3:07 remaining, hit the top of the right upright and went through, sending the second-year team into the divisional round next week, at either Denver or New England.

The Bills, the AFC's dominant team this decade with four Super Bowl appearances - and as many losses - lost their first playoff game ever at Rich Stadium, where they were 9-0.

But they couldn't handle Natrone Means, who rushed for 175 yards, or Mark Brunell, who improvised under constant pressure to hit Jimmy Smith and Keenan McCardell for big plays.

The biggest play was an 11-yard third-down pass to McCardell on which Jeff Burris, earlier a hero, missed a tackle that would have forced a punt. The winning kick was set up by Jim Kelly's fumble on a run. Aaron Beasley recovered and ran it to the Buffalo 42, and Kelly left the game with an an undisclosed injury.

Todd Collins could do nothing in Kelly's place, and the Jaguars won their first playoff appearance.
Brunell finished 18-for-33 for 239 yards and two

But Means, who started for San Diego when it won the AFC title two years ago, was the key to victory, helped by second-year left tackle Tony Boselli, who effectively neutralized Bruce Smith. Means had a 30-yard TD run on which he ran over Smith and a 62-yard run, set up by Boselli's block on Smith, that set up Hollis' first field goal, from 27 ception return for a touchdown, putting Buffalo ahead 27-20 43 seconds into the fourth period. White tipped Brunell's pass and Burris grabbed it and raced down the left sideline.

Back came the Jaguars, who benefited from unusually mild weather that made them feel right at home in Rich Stadium. They drove 65 yards and Smith scored on a 2-yard pass to tie it again.

Thurman Thomas' 7-yard touchdown catch 3:30 into the game was his 19th TD in the playoffs, an NFL record; he was tied with Emmitt Smith of Dallas heading into Saturday. And it tied the NFL record for consecutive playoff games with a TD - John Stallworth also scored in eight straight games for

But the Bills handed it right back.
From the Buffalo 24, Kelly's weak shovel pass went right to defensive end Clyde Simmons and the veteran rumbled in for the tying score. It was the fifth interception for a TD against Kelly this year.

He didn't flinch, however, leading the Bills on a 68vard drive in which he and even scrambled for 15, making two superb fakes on the play. Thomas ran it in from the 2, giving him 118 postseason points, a league record.

At that point, the Jaguars could have folded, as a playoff neophyte might be expected to do. Instead, Means broke off the 62-yard run.

The Jaguars moved to the Buffalo 36 on their next possession before Thomas Smith picked off Brunell's hanging pass in the end zone.

But they stopped Kelly's fourth-down sneak at their 16, got a 47-yard third-down pass to Pete Mitchell and Means' 30-yard TD run on consecutive plays and Steve Christie tied it 1:56 before halftime with a 33-yard field goal after rookie Eric Moulds returned a kickoff 57 yards. He gave Buffalo a 20-17 lead with a 47-yarder to open the second half, but Hollis tied it with a 24-yarder.

Betar Jerusalem pulls further away from pack

THE race for the National League title appears to be getting colder and colder, and following this weekend's round of matches, it is hard to see who will challenge Betar Jerusalem, who now has a seven-point lead over second placed Hapoel Petah Tikva. Betar was unimpressive in its 2-0 away win at Ironi Rishon, while Petah Tikva threw away a comfortable 3-0 lead in Friday's match against Hapoel Kfar Sava in a march which ended as a 3-3 draw. The result prompted Petah Tikva manager Nir Levin to say that it felt worse than losing 5-0. The only major upset of the weekend was Maccabi Tel Aviv's away loss to cellar dwellers Hapoel Beit She'an, Eitan Tayeb coming up with a superb longrange shot which whistled past Alexander Obarov in the Maccabi Maccabi will rue its missed chances, it had countless, but the ball simply would not go in.

There was no Second Division play this weekend, as the lower divisions played in the seventh round of the State Cup.

The outstanding result was the upset of Second Division leaders Hakoah Ramat Gan by Third-Division Hapoel Hod Hasharon.

Ten Second Division sides will be joined by four Third Division sides and one Fourthand one Fifth-Division side in the eighth round of the competition. Yesterday's 16 winners will face the National League's 16 clubs on January 25. Ironi Rishon Lezion 0

Betar played badly, and the match against Rishon before a sellout crowd was by no means a one-sided affair dispute over Digel's request that a but two moments of inspiration was all that was needed to see the Jerusalemites to victory.

Petah Tikva looked unstoppable as Eli Abarbanel, in particular, waltzed around the Kfar Sava defense. Abarbanel put Petah Tikva in the lead on 23 minutes when he struck a superb curling free kick over the wall

Three minutes later, Abarbanel was in the thick of the action again when he was felled in the area, Motti Kakkon stepped up to take the penalty and struck it high underneath the

Two more minutes passed and Abarbanel made it 3-0 with a superb solo goal as he passed three defenders and shot low from close range.

But then, for some unknown reason. Petah Tikva fell asleep. Kfar Sava began picking up the pace and Francisco dos Santos Washington lobbed an excellent header into the goal over the advancing Shai Hess. In the second half, Kfar Sava looked the more dominant side but had to wait until 15 minutes from time before they scored again, when substitute Nir Reichman struck with almost his first touch of the game.

Kfar Sava was then reduced to ten men after Tomer Shem-Tov was sent off for a dangerous foul on a Petah Yaniv Abargil equalized from the penalty spot with just three minutes to go, and Petah Tikva's Nir Arbiv added to his side's misery when he also got sent off for a second bookable offense.

Baku was lucky not to have been sent off for his foul and was given only a yellow card. He then dived well to his left to stop Mizrahi's low shot. Of course, the prediction of solid but lower returns may turn out to be true. But it just as well may not. Dollar surges

CURRENCY REPORT

NEW YORK (AP) - The dollar briefly surged past 116 yen to another 45-month high Friday after Japan's trade minister expressed concern about the economic outlook next year, inciting a new round of weakness in the Japanese currency. The yen's decline also contributed to a broad rally in the British pound, which rose nearly 2 pence to hit the highest level against the dollar in more than four

The dollar was mostly higher in other foreign-exchange dealings lightened by the absence of traders who took off for the Christmas-New Year's holidays.

Although the low volume distorted price movements, market participants said the dollar's breach of 115 yen and 116 yen this week laid the basis for a possible advance toward 120 yen, an exchange rate last seen nearly four years ago.

"Even with the thin liquidity, the move was very significant," said Dennis Heidt, chief dealer at the New York branch of Banque Paribas. "We have broken an important level."

 EMMA - Against formidable odds, Douglas McGrath has managed to create yet another delightful and intelligent cinematic rendition of a Jane Austen novel. And he's done it with his own gentle, comedic touch, infusing punch and spirit to the prim, early 19th-century courtship rituals. described in the book. His approach to the material is playful, at once theatrical and rather breathless in its forward march, much like the heroine herself. Played splendidly by Gwyneth Paltrow, this Emma.

Weizman leaves for first state visit to India

PRESIDENT Ezer Weizman is expected to inquire about the possibility of releasing seven young Israelis being held in Indian jails when he pays a state visit to India this week, the first by an Israeli head of state.

The detained Israelis, one of them a young woman, were caught with marijuana, a drug commonly smoked in India. according to Herut Lapid of Kibbutz Ayelet Hashahar who has devoted his energies to attaining the release of Israelis imprisoned abroad.

Foreigners who are caught with this drug face stiff sentences and two of the group have already received 10 year s entences," Lapid said last week. "I hope the president will do everything to secure their BATSHEVA TSUR release, as a humanitarian gesture." The president and his wife, Reuma. will arrive in New Delhi today...

Tomorrow, they will be officially welcomed to the presidential residence by Dr. Shankar Dayal Sharma, India's president, at a ceremony attended by members of the cabinet and other leaders.

Weizman will confer with Sharma and his deputy, K.R. Narayanan, as well as Prime Minister H.D. Deve Gowda and Foreign Minister I.K. Guiral.

Weizman will be accompanied by a delegation of some 25 leading industrialists who will hold talks to explore expanding economic ties ambassadors in January 1992.

$313 million in 1995 while India exported goods worth $190m. to Israel

The delegation will include heads of Israel's electronics industries who will investigate the possibility of joining in a multi-million dollar project to upgrade India's MIG planes. Weizman will also fly to Bangalore where he will visit India's space center and a former RAF base where he served during World War II.

During the visit, he will sign three agreements with the Indian government. India recognized Israel in 1950 but relations were kept on a low level until the exchange of

Israel Bonds workers in US set to strike

WHEN Gideon Patt takes over as president of Israel Bonds early next year, he may be forced to answer his own phone, as hundreds of staffers at Bonds offices in the US are prepared to strike at midnight Tuesday.

Talks between Israel Bonds and the union representing nearly 300 non-management employees came to a standstill on December 19, according to Kevin McHale, the union representative for District Council 1707 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees. The union covers support, computer and administrative staff, as well as Bonds' field representatives.

Five days later, Bonds asked for another meeting with the union on December 31.

The contract expires at midnight that day. "In 1996, going on 1997, no one in America is itching for a strike." McHale said, referring to grim economic conditions in the US. "But this group will not work with-

Bonds had offered an "insufficient" salary increase, and was seeking changes in pension plans and health insurance, McHale said. An Israel Bonds spokesman in New York declined to comment. This would be the first strike at Bonds in a decade

McHale said. The union is negotiating with the board of Israel

Bonds, not Patt, or the outgoing president, Maj.-Gen. (res.) Natan Sharony. McHale said. Israel Bonds has been generating less income in the past few years. It was expected to sell no more than $850 million in bonds in all 1996, the organization said earlier this year. In 1995, Israel Bonds raised $935m., which, in turn, was down from $999m. in 1994. Those sales represent government debt, and the ceiling is set by the government. Earlier this year, Israel Bonds, which has raised $14 billion since 1951, accounted for slightly more than 30 percent of the outstanding government debt.

JNF turns 95 amid controversy

AS the Jewish National Fund celebrates its 95th anniversary today, it is facing a revolt from some of its regional leaders, who contend that the venerable Zionist organization is mismanaged and fails to send a respectable amount of funds to Israel. They are calling for the ouster of the national director and other officers.

The complaints come as JNF is reviewing its structure, revising its accounting, admitting an image problem and replacing its key professional staff after an audit highlighted numerous deficiencies.

Samuel Cohen, who has been the director of JNF for nearly 20 years, will no longer be responsible for daily operations but for long-range strategic planning. In addition to a new chief executive officer, JNF is searching for a new chief financial officer. A number of task forces are reviewing the structure of JNF and considering a change in the proportion of funds that are sent to Israel, according to JNF President Milton Shapiro.

However, Michael Lipof, head of JNF's New England region, said Cohen and Shapiro must resign.

"We can't do anything meaningful until we have a clean slate," Lipof said. "As long as the perpe-trators of this mismanagement are in place, we can't go forward."

A recent, independent audit conducted by the Deloitte and Touche accounting firm cleared JNF of MARILYN HENRY NEW YORK

duct, which were raised by several regional lay leaders. There is no evidence of fraud, misconduct [and] malfeasance by INF personnel, nor is there any evidence of misappropriation of JNF funds," according to a report to JNF's board.

But there were management, accounting and fund-raising inefficiencies, as well as errors in JNF's financial statements that led to an "atmosphere of suspicion." the report said. It was impossible to specify, for example, how much was spent on education and other Lipof said that JNF's administrative spending was "unbridled" and that only 20 percent was spent on Israel. "How can we ask our community to donate to an organization that is so top heavy that it is keeping 80 cents on the dollar?" he said. His assessment was challenged by Robert Levine, JNF's national campaign chairman. JNF raised about $30 million last year, of which some $6m. was collected in "deferred gifts," which are essentially commitments for bequests.

Effectively 40% of what JNF raises is destined for Israel, said Levine, an accountant by profession. That amount is some $5m, of the available cash, which is spent immediately, added to the "deferred gifts." Some 30% of JNF's costs are administrative, Levin said.

The crux of the clamor appears to concern Zionist education and the high costs of selling trees. Their costs, already misunderstood, were confused by sloppy bookkeeping and poor public relations, Levine said.

JNF is the only organization in the US conducting extensive Zionist education programs. "Programming is equally part of our mission." Levine said, adding that the World Zionist Congress charged JNF with undertaking Zionist education in the Diaspora. This season, leading up to Tu Bishvat, is INF's most public educational and fund-raising effort. JNF is expected to sell 100,000 trees - one at a time - to children in Jewish day and afternoon

However, it costs JNF $5 to process an individual $10 tree sale. Levine opposes recent suggestions that JNF stop selling single trees. "It's an educational instrument, a symbol," he said. "It's worth losing money to have that symbol."

The regional leaders are to meet in Chicago next month, shortly before Tu Bishvat, which falls on January 23. Lipof said some of the current regional JNF boards may fold. "[Last year,] I was considered a heretic." Lipof said, adding that now discontent with JNF is "widespread."

A Jerusalem couple has received first prize in the prestigious stamp design competition, the Robert Stultz Cup for philately in the field of music.

Naomi and Meir Eshel designed a series of NIS 2.40 stamps for the Philatelic Service in honor of the well-known 20th-century Jewish composers Arnold Schoenberg and Darius Milhaud. The cup was awarded by the widow of Stultz, who was a composer of operetras and movie scores in Vienna and a stamp lover.
